Pedagogical contents

Abstract of International Week	This SEA-EU International Week brings together colleagues from across the partner universities to explore creative approaches to research dissemination. The aim is to investigate how artistic, narrative, visual, and participatory methods can be used to make research accessible to new audiences and foster engagement beyond academia. Rather than viewing dissemination as a one-way process of transferring research findings to an audience, we will explore how creative forms of communication can open up spaces for dialogue, reflection, and co-creation. Through the exchange of experiences, practical workshops, and collaborative discussions, participants will gain insights into how creative dissemination approaches can strengthen connections between research and society, reach diverse communities, and stimulate critical thinking and meaningful reflection. The staff week will provide an opportunity to share practices, develop new ideas, and build a network of colleagues interested in innovative and impactful approaches to research communication. Participants are kindly asked to complete this registration form by 12/10/2026. Participants interested in presenting at the Creative Research Dissemination Showcase on Day 1 are invited to provide a title and short description of their contribution.
subject/theme of the courses	Creative research dissemination expected teaching language(s)	English profile of students taking the courses	This International Week is designed for academics interested in research dissemination, including, researchers, lecturers, professors, postdoctoral fellows, and doctoral candidates who wish to explore innovative and engaging ways to communicate their research to diverse audiences. Participants are invited to contribute to a Creative Research Dissemination Showcase on Day 1, where they can present examples of innovative dissemination practices from their own research, projects, or institutions. Students are also invited to attend this showcase session, creating opportunities for dialogue and inspiration across different career stages. The programme is particularly relevant for participants who are interested in: • Enhancing the visibility and impact of their research • Reaching audiences beyond academia • Exploring the opportunities of creative and arts-based dissemination • Strengthening public engagement and knowledge exchange activities • Sharing experiences and best practices with international colleagues The International Week welcomes participants from all disciplines who are eager to explore diverse approaches to communicating research and engaging wider audiences.
